

Fields, page 199 In 1990, Jeb reached out to his father's office to set up a meeting with executives from Motorola, a major donor to the Republican Party in Florida. He wanted his dad to meet with Christopher Galvin, CEO of Motorola. "I urge you to visit with Motorola at your convenience," wrote Jeb, "to see first-hand how the Motorola experience can help our country (including agencies in the federal government)." He sent the message with an attachment containing a presentation from Motorola.	New York Times, 02/15/2015 By the summer of 1990, after Mr. Bush had left state government and plunged into a corporate career, he had a "very interesting meeting" with Christopher Galvin, a senior executive at Motorola — and Mr. Bush shared his enthusiasm with his father's chief of staff. "I urge you to visit with Motorola at your convenience to see first-hand how the Motorola experience can help our country (including agencies in the federal government)," Mr. Bush wrote, appending a 14-page presentation from the company. In the following months, not only did Mr. Sununu, the chief of staff, meet with Motorola executives, but so did the president himself.
Fields, page 199 Jeb's efforts to set up the meeting proved beneficial to Galvin. When Jeb's brother George W. Bush became president, he appointed Galvin to a committee that advised the executive office on telecommunications issues.	New York Times, 02/15/2015 prestigious honor for Florida businesses. His brother George W. Bush, when he was president, appointed Mr. Galvin to a committee advising him on national security in telecommunications.
Fields, page 199 The meeting Jeb arranged for Motorola was far from an exception. It was the norm. In fact, he apparently pinged the White House so much that his father's staff members had to come up with new ways to deal with the influx of his requests. One solution, proposed by an assistant to his father named Jane Kenny, was for Jeb to stop sending requests directly to government agencies and offices. She politely asked him to just send all requests to her. "That way," Kenny wrote, "there will be no chance for misunderstanding."	New York Times, 02/15/2015 While Mr. Bush's father welcomed his input, staff members did not always share that enthusiasm. The archives reveal polite but firm attempts to rein him in. Jane Kenny, special assistant to Mr. Bush's father when he was vice president, twice wrote to ask Mr. Bush to route requests for appointments through her instead of contacting an agency or office directly. "That way," Ms. Kenny wrote, "there will be no chance for misunderstanding."
Fields, page 203 Gray responded by informing Jeb that his ally would get "thoughtful consideration." Jeb recommended other friends for the head of White House security and the IRS commissioner.	New York Times, 02/15/2015 Mr. Gray replied that if there were an opening, Judge Fay would get "thoughtful consideration." The ambition of the request fit a pattern for Mr. Bush, who also recommended allies seeking other major positions, like head of White House security and Internal Revenue Service commissioner.

Fields, page 214 When Jeb arrived in Hainan, China, in 2011 to improve relations between Chinese and Florida businesses, he received the type of greeting that an ambassador or president of the United States would have received. The governor of Hainan—who had visited Florida earlier in the year—greeted Bush with a necklace of flowers.	Bloomberg, 12/11/2014 For Jeb Bush, the family name has been a more propitious credential in China. In 2011 he visited the tropical island of Hainan, off China’s southern coast, and received a dignitary’s welcome from the governor of Hainan province, Luo Baoming. According to Chinese media reports, Bush, bedecked in a necklace of flowers, praised Hainan’s environmental and
Fields, page 214 Because of the lack of transparency with Jeb’s funds, one cannot fully know the nature of his investors and investments. However, according to sources close to Jeb, BH Global Aviation has invested in a Hong Kong company called Hawker Pacific.	Bloomberg, 12/11/2014 While BH Global Aviation doesn’t publicly disclose the nature of its business, a source close to Bush says the fund has invested in Hawker Pacific, an aviation sales and services company based in Hong Kong. “Boeing, every year, projects
Fields, page 214 According to SEC filings in 2014, 98 percent of its funding comes from foreign citizens. The structure of the fund has been set up	Bloomberg, 12/11/2014 receive money from foreign investors. The Nov. 27 SEC filing states that 98 percent of BH Global Aviation’s funding, or $60,883,500, comes from “non-U.S. persons.” Typically, a fund’s managers kick
Fields, page 215 anonymous. However, one of the names of the investors has been disclosed: Guang Yang. He is the CEO of a Beijing company called Finergy Capital, and, not surprisingly, he has ties to Hainan. In 2010 Yang partnered with Hainan Airlines and bought an upscale country club in California.	Bloomberg, 12/11/2014 Another is Guang Yang, CEO of Finergy Capital, a Beijing-based private equity fund. In 2010, Yang joined with Hainan Airlines to acquire the Pasadera Country Club and golf course in Monterey, Calif. Yang renamed it for his limited partner Jack Nicklaus. Last
Fields, page 88 Pelosi’s district got 20 percent of the first round of Obamacare waivers issued in 2011. Many of the lucky recipients were upscale restaurants and hotels. For example, an upscale eatery in her district, Boboquivari’s, received a waiver. An entrée at this eatery ranges from $30 to $60. The five-star luxury hotel Taj Campton Place, where the average room costs	Daily Caller, 05/17/2011 For instance, Boboquivari’s restaurant in Pelosi’s district in San Francisco got a waiver from Obamacare. Boboquivari’s advertises $59 porterhouse steaks, $39 filet mignons and $35 crab dinners.

Fields, page 115 Hillary Clinton fancies herself a champion for equal pay in the workforce. Although she publicly advocates for the destruction of the glass ceiling, there clearly seems to have been a glass ceiling in her office when she was a senator: Her female staffers were paid 72 cents for each dollar paid to her male staffers. The average median salary for a female	Free Beacon, 02/23/2015 Hillary Clinton portrays herself as a champion of women in the workforce, but women working for her in the U.S. Senate were paid 72 cents for each dollar paid to men, according to a Washington Free Beacon analysis of her Senate years' salary data.
Fields, page 117 According to the data available for fiscal year 2013, the average female salary in Durbin's office is more than $11,000 less than the average male salary. Pay inequity is critical and should be stopped by average American business owners, but not for Durbin. Durbin and the Democratic leadership in the Senate blasted Republicans for not supporting the Paycheck Fairness Act. Meanwhile, if you looked at the staff of the Democratic leadership at the time, not even one of them had a female chief of staff or communications director—two of the highest and often most-well-paid positions in a congressional office.	Free Beacon, 04/08/2014 The average female salary is $11,505 lower than the average male salary in Durbin's office, according to an analysis of Senate salary data from fiscal year 2013 that showed that more than Not a single member of the Senate Democrat leadership has a female chief of staff or communications director, the Washington Times points out.